RTS.

N the Approach of an Election it is extremely natural for all Parties to make their Addreffes to you, and that in such Terms as can leave you no Doubt how far you are free. If, according to the strange Suggestions of some discontented Spirits amongst us, you had no more than the Shew of Freedom, then, undoubtedly, you would ore than Compliment in fuch Applications as ble at this Time. But inafmuch as you fee warm, how eager, all Denominations of these Addresses, and particularly those who, y loudly affert they as firmly believed, would to you at all, you cannot but be satisfied of lower, and convinced of your own Freedom. can never deceive you. Look into all the all the Papers, all the Discourses handed to Occasion, and see whether the Language in are writ be the Tongue of Slaves. After et with yourselves, what stronger Proof can in Justification of the Administration's Love , than their indulging such Licentiousness Next find out if you can, why those who eded the Press in spite of such Usage thereld incline to violate your Freedom; or how have it in their Power, who never took one ds it, as almost every former Ministry had some Presence or other? Make these Inquiand freely, the Refult will be your confessing a more flourishing Condition than ever.

a just Sense of this that I also, as well as n, offer you my Sentiments at this Critical and submit to your Consideration such Propopear to me for your Service, and the Arguth incline me to think fo. In acting thus I eat you as Freemen; and I hope you will the worse for it. Some Men tell you (but odd Way of making their Court) that you , infatuated, enflaved, and dictate to you as ly thought you were fo, and that themselves Masters. To me this appears at once ridiinfolent. Ridiculous, because were what e they durst not fay it; and insolent, because ou in such a Manner as no Free People ought It is pretending to cheat your Understandings, e your Votes as it were by Force. As I apngs in quite another Light, it becomes me quite another Manner; and as my principal o encourage you to preserve your Liberty, I an Obligation of telling you, that Liberty is ssession; that it is a dangerous Thing to quit for the Sake of running after Shadows; and a are betray'd into a Defire of altering your n, you may run a great Hazard of never rei which is, in plain English, running the being undone. It is only in your own o this, and therefore you only ought, at fuch ecially, to be warn'd of it.

y Way to mislead and ruin a People, is to apprehend the Welfare of Civil Society to he Philosophers were wont to represent human Problematical: For by this means they rought into Disputes, which will effectually Aim. As no Man can be happy who fixes that Term, so no People can be quiet and who are thro' Domestick Differences ever in Our Ancestors were much wifer in this in we, for they express'd plainly what they Liberty and Property: These we most certainly it ought to be our Business to It is true, that in respect to neither our t is without Bounds : But this is owing not vernment, or the Administration of our Gobut to our Nature : Absolute Liberty would erty, and Absolute Property would soon be rty, for want of Defence. If therefore for dverting to these self-evident and necessary s, we are drawn in to contend for, or even what we never can possess, it is easy to con foon and how much we may be embroil'd, y to foretel that we can dever carry our Point.

In fuch a case we might worry and destroy each other, we might sill the Land with Blood and Mourning; but the End must be returning to the Point from which we started, and sitting down at last content with this Discovery (to be had on cheaper Terms) that some Restraint is the Source of Freedom.

But it will be faid, to what does all this tend? Would you have us always burden'd with Debts and Taxes, as we are at present? Do you call yourself a Comforter, and pretend to take from us Hope? I should be both Knave and Fool if I should. I am far from saying that you may not rid yourselves of many Restraints: I am not of opinion that your present Load of Debts and Taxes either ought not, or may not be lessened. So wide are my Thoughts from thefe, that I fincerely wish to afford you true and just, instead of chimerical and vain Hopes. But from a View of doing this I had been filent; and having this in view, you cannot blame me if I speak. It depends on the next Parliament to procure for you these good Things, at least in some measure; it depends on you to chuse such a Representative as may do this; and that you may know what you are doing in this Matter, some Things must of necessity be consider'd; otherwise, instead of acting so as to lessen present Difficulties, you will run into such Practices as may bring you into greater. Be not disturbed because this Advice is convey'd to you in a Gazetteer: If you want Courage to examine and judge candidly every Council that is given you, how can you suppose yourselves Lovers of Freedom? I do but offer, it is with you to receive or reject.

The War is the first thing which ought to employ your Thoughts. It is an Affair of great Expence, a Business which nearly concerns your Trade, a Matter of the last Importance to you as a Nation. In the Choice of your Members therefore it becomes you to consider who are most likely to behold this in a National and not a Party Light. I mean, who will be heartily for bringing it, by a vigorous Profecution, to a speedy Conclusion; who, for making it the Subject of eternal Clamour, and the Ground of tedious Enquiries. Peace and War are indisputably in the Power of the Crown. But it is as indisputable, that when the Crown has entred into a just and necessary War for the Sake of the People, it ought to be supported therein by the People for their own Sakes. Neither can you doubt that Troops, Seamen, Fleets are more necessary in time of War, than examining Letters, Papers, Instructions, which while Expeditions are carrying on, may tend to the Information of our Enemies, and which might at any other time serve all Purposes of Information to your Representatives as well. It is the happy Conclusion of this War that all Parties feem to defire, and therefore this being so, you ought to conceive nothing to the Prejudice of Gentlemen who have pressed for such Measures as were necessary to render us formidable to all our Enemies, tho' they might be in some degree uneasy to ourselves. The Sasety of the Nation at home, and its Honour abroad, are not Things to be dally'd with, by fuch especially as may be made responsible for Miscarriages they were not able to prevent. 'Tis easy for such as envy great Men, to find out plaufible Pretences for opposing whatever feems most likely to crown the Schemes of those great Men with Success.

In the next place, confider what Candidates are best acquainted with the Trade and Interest of the Nation, and appear most ready and most able to promote them. The Way to make us wealthy is, to encourage Industry and punish Idleness. It is not enough for this Purpole that good Laws are made, they must be also put in Execution. You cannot but remember how vigouroully the Government supported the Act for preventing the excessive Use of spirituous Liquors, and yet you can not but know how by the Arts of some Craftsmen the People were stirred almost into a Rebellion in desence of their free Right of poisoning themselves, whereby that Act was at last in a good measure defeated. In a Nation where such Practices prevail, it is impossible our Manufactures should flourish, or Trade extend itself as it would otherwise do. Reason assures us of this as well as Experience confirms it; and therefore, if you in earnest defire to see the People everywhere busy, the Poor thoroughly employ'd, and Commerce diffusing itself thro' the whole Island, you ought to bestow your Votes on Men who mean well to Traffick, and at the same time know what they mean. A Declamation against Duties will do little, an Outcry against Taxes less; the Way to redress the Grievances Trade may labour under is, to examine them candidly, and then to pull up their Roots. All this you have in your Power, you can judge well enough who will, and who can perform these Performances; and such, you may rely on, will make proper Representatives. Such will answer the Ends for which they are elected, and do every thing you can in Reason expect of them, without standing in need of Directions, or desiring their sanguine Schemes to be countenanced by your Instructions.

countenanced by your Instructions. Thirdly and lastly, consider how far Gentlemen are or are not affected to the present Government, for this you will in the End find to be of all others the Point of most Importance. Our Constitution is so excellent in itself, and our Welfare depends so strongly thereon, that he who would mount it up to an absolute Monarchy, and he who would fink it to an Aristocratick Principality by pruning the Prerogative, would be alike an Enemy to the People. At present we have so little to fear from the Crown, that such as would render us jealous of it are forc'd to affirm, your Danger lies in the Court it pays you. On the other hand, such as affect to treat Monarchy itself most rudely affirm they are abetted by Numbers, and sometimes talk in a very high Strain. But fure the People will scarce be angry without any Provocation, or fusfer the Condescension of the Crown by its Ministers, the genuine Mark because it is the necesfary Consequence of our Freedom, to be stigmatized with the odious Name of Corruption. All Disputes about Government, all Alterations, nay all Attempts to alter the Constitution of a Country, are attended with the worst of Consequences, and we have late Experi-

At all Events, you cannot avoid perceiving how pernicious such Struggles would be at this Juncture, when all Europe fixes its Eyes on our Conduct, to which very probably it may once more owe its Deliverance.

I made it my Choice to express myself in as few and as plain Words as possible, that you might neither mistake nor forget my Meaning. Consider then attentively and cooly these honest and open Remarks as to the next General Election, and I persuade myself you will be-ence of this in other Places, and at home. A Century ago our Constitution was subverted by Men who pretended Zeal for Liberty, but when they got into Power

the People became Slaves. At the Revolution our Constitution was not altered but adjusted, the Crown lost nothing which it had a well grounded Claim to, the Rights of the People were stated and acknowledged. In this Situation we now are, and questionless it is our Interest to continue in it. Such as contend for, if they could bring about an Alteration, might benefit themselves, perhaps secure something better than Places, but for the Nation in general, they must lose. Wherever Property is there is Power, we hear often faid, and we know it to be true; it is however not less so, that transferring Power by an Act of the Legislature is the readiest

Way to transfer Property, and it may be worth your Inquiry, how far this would be done by a Place-Bill.

Your True Friend, and Devoted Servant,

R. FREEMAN.

Yesterday arriv'd a Mail from Flanders.

Vienna, April 1. N. S. THE Elector of Cologue, at the same time that he recognized the Queen of Hungary, claimed her Majesty's Guaranty for the Bishopricks he is posses'd of, not only against the King of Prussia who has form'd Pretentions to four Places in the Bishoprick of Muntter, but against the Elector of Hanover who forms some Demand upon that of Hildesheim. A Writing is publish'd here on the part of the King of Prussia, wherein he complains of Russians having been sent into his Army to affailinate him. This Acculation, which has not the least Probability, has excited a universal Refentment, and put a stop for the present to all Proposals of Accommodation that were on foot, and is also the Reason why Orders are fent to General Neuperg to attack the Prussians wherever he can find them, so that News of fome Action may be expected every Day. By the last Express from Constantinople the Turkish Ambassador here receiv'd his Credentials for taking his Leave of this Court; and the Count d' Ulfeld writes word, that he proposes to set out from Constantinople the 6th instant; all Affairs relating to Peace and the Limits of the two Empires being entirely adjusted to the Satisfaction of our Court; and there being new aothing more to fear from the Porte, three Regiments more are ordered to march from Hungary to Upper Austria.
